Too Much Stress Placed
On High Blood Pressure

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.
THE POST-MERIDIAN atmosphere on the porch of summer hotels is likely to be filled with lengthy discussions of high blood pressure. The occupants of the rockers, ceaselessly rocking back and forth, whisper that the gentleman with the cane is here on account of the fact that he has just learned he has high blood pressure.
And naturally he is in a very depressed state of mind and has almost forgotten to get angry at the income tax.

Then the blow may fall upon anyone else on the porch, and through a casual visit to the doctor one discovers that he or she, too, has high blood pressure.
Sometimes one feels that doctors ought to stop telling people about it.

Dr. Clendenning will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

their blood pressure, for the average person takes such a serious view of it. The word "high pressure" sounds as if you were sitting on the valve of a steam boiler which might blow up any time.
Doctors often forget to explain that they do not take such a serious view of the matter.

These emotional factors in causing a rise of blood pressure may be transitory. A good example of emotions temporarily influencing blood pressure is seen in the practice of the high jumper.

There are, however, many cases where blood pressure has continued on a high level due entirely to emotional stress. Thus a typical case related by Wolfe is of a young man who had a blood pressure continuously over 160 (diastolic 100).
He was found to have a definite psychic disturbance, with fears and anxiety neurosis. After three months of treatment, purely psy-chologic in character, his pressure went down to 136 (diastolic 85) and remained there.

I agree with Menninger that the attempts to treat high blood pressure with a rest cure—prohibiting golf, walking or work at the office —the only forms of relaxation to which they have access—are liable to cause more damage than cure.

Man Mountain Dean Monday morning as he went to work in the foundry arched in a big black bristling beard. He started growing his whiskers on May 9, the day the plant closed down and vowed to let them grow until he returned to work. This is how he looked after ten weeks, before shaving them off.
