The regular business of the Circle was disposed of and included plans for the study and entertainment for the year. Names were drawn for the 1935 calendar. Through the help of the Three Link Circle a child of the I. O. O. F. Orphans Home will be taken care of during the year. Two names were added to the membership.

CENTRAL P. T. A. MET MONDAY.
The Central P. T. A. met in regular session Monday at 3:30 o'clock. The opening exercises were in charge of Miss Shimers second grade pupils who delighted us with a six part movie of a story from their reader. Miss Betty Kerwin very capably played two piano numbers, a selection of Bachmann and Narcissus. Miss Eva Creswell reviewed the book, "Tarkenton's Little Orvie," a very appropriate book for Parent-Teachers group. Miss Creswell's review was well prepared and given in a most interesting manner.

Cong. Biermann Opposes Tax Exempt Bonds.

wealth escapes taxation. Not only does that situation lay a much heavier burden on the tax-paying property of the United States, but it has a bad moral effect on the people. It makes it appear that people of wealth have a means of entirely escaping payment of taxes.

"I do not doubt that the government saves in interest because a tax exempt bond naturally can be sold to greater advantage than any taxable bond. There is also the argument in favor of tax exempt securities that the government gets the financial benefit without the expense of tax collection. But I believe that the arguments for the tax exempt securities are far outweighed by the arguments against them."

Pres. Roosevelt Takes Up Plans For NRA Future.
He had advanced the NRA question on his program of administrative business. It had been previously believed it would be allowed to simmer along until well into the congressional session.

Among those deliberating in the white house conference were Donald R. Richberg, recovery coordinator, Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins, members of the national recovery board, Edwin L. Davis head of the federal trade commission, Charles Fahy of the petroleum department and representatives of the department of justice.

Presence of Fahy and attorneys from the justice department was believed to indicate discussions touched on the recent supreme court decision invalidating the oil provisions of the national recovery act and constitutional question regarding new legislation.

State Finishes Testimony In Kidnap Case

ular evidence for a final blow at Bruno Richard Hauptmann, the government today traced to his handiwork, by circumstantial evidence, the ladder by which the Lindbergh crime was committed.

The state's case against the brawny Bronx carpenter neared completion. Attorney General David T. Wilentz confidently expected to rest late today, unless long cross-examinations should frustrate his plans.

It is therefore possible that within another 24 hours, Bruno Richard Hauptmann, the first witness in his own defense, may face the jury and tell his strange version of how he acquired the ransom money through which he was trapped.

The three-section ladder, standing against the wall of the court room, a mute witness against the prisoner, was found on the Lindbergh estate shortly after the kidnaping.

Police officers today matched wooden pieces from it, in their evidence, against a board that had been removed from the attic floor of Bruno Hauptmann's home in the Bronx—and declared the pieces fitted "perfectly."

Thus, the last piece of the jig-saw puzzle the state is trying to put together as a portrait of the man it accuses of murdering Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., was set in place.

When the noon recess was ordered, Arthur Koehler, the government's expert on woods was on the stand, being cross-examined as to his qualifications as an expert, by Frederick A. Pope, of defense counsel.

Pope sought to keep Koehler's evidence from the jury, on the grounds that "there is no such animal known to manking as an expert on woods."

As a prelude to winding up the state's case against Hauptmann, the defense opened up a barrage of criticism against the New Jersey police.

Before the government sent its concluding witnesses to the stand, state trooper Frank A. Kelley, the state's fingerprint expert, was subjected to cross-examination by Edward J. Reilly, chief of defense counsel.

Kelly had previously testified he was unable to find fingerprints either in the nursery or on the ladder which, the government contends, was used to perpetrate the kidnaping of Charles A. Lindbergh Jr.

It is Reilly's contention that the police were lax, inefficient and inexperienced, and that the case would have been solved long ago—"by the arrest of others"—had they operated more quickly.

Money Extend Harvest Loans

senate agriculture committee which received the 1935 loan bill from the house and increased the authorization from $50,000,000 to $100,000,000.

If the money is disbursed it will bring to almost $3,000,000,000 the outstanding loans and discounts of the farm credit administration in behalf of farmers. The largest item of this sum is $1,865,000,000 advanced through federal land banks; next is $587,260,000 charged against the land bank commissioner. Federal intermediate credit banks, production credit associations, regional agricultural credit corporations and similar agencies add to the aggregate.

The farm credit administration balance sheet as of Nov. 30, 1935, shows that for the period 1921-35 unpaid loans and discounts in connection with seed and other emergency crop loans aggregate $78,341,364. The records indicate that approximately $25,000,000 has been loaned to farmers on an emergency basis since that time.

Senator William H. King, D., Utah, warned of extravagance in criticizing the bill. He estimated expenditures of the federal government, states and political subdivisions now aggregate 25 percent of all the earnings of the American people.

He sought unsuccessfully by amendment to forbid the government lending agency to use any of the $100,000,000 for paying salaries or other expenses.

"I want to point out," said Senator Alva B. Adams, D., Colo., "that it is not only money that may come in from collections (of overdue loans) but the appropriation itself may be so used. In other words, the entire $100,000,000 may be diverted to other uses without making use of a single penny of it for the very purposes of the bill."

King complained the committee had doubled the appropriation without public hearings to establish the actual needs of distressed farmers.

The important thing, so far as municipalities are concerned, is not so much the issuance of permits as retention of revenue. In many instances beer revenue is the only dependable source municipal governments have.

A severe criticism of lax enforcement was directed at police forces and city councils by Joseph H. Schinvoit, Des Moines, president of the beer retailers.

"Our criticism is not aimed at the present law, which we consider a finely-drafted document if properly enforced," he said, "but at municipalities which needed the revenue to make up deficits in their budgets and paid slight attention to real enforcement."

Schinvoit said he believed an increase in the permit fee to $500 as suggested by some, would leave only the bootlegger in the beer party field. He said such an "exorbitant price" would eliminate the honest dealer. An annual report of equipment obtained by dealers should be filed with the council or administrative body, he said, in order to prevent manufacturers from "obtaining a struggle-hold on dealers by furnishing them with equipment and gaining what amounts to a lien on the dealers' business."

Chiefs of Police H. A. Alber, Des Moines, and Ray S. Tapper, Cedar Rapids, and Sheriff Frank Bucholtz, Carroll, all added for more power of enforcement. Alber suggested revocation of permits should apply to the premises of the place in question and not to the individual. He said that would prevent a man's wife or friend from taking out a permit for him after his had been revoked.
