"Peter was the only one. You see, I was thirty-three and Larry only twenty-one when we married." Mrs. Bellamy said suddenly.

"You look twenty-one tonight," Tony commented readily.

The older woman got to her feet, laid a hand on Tony's shoulder.

"Come and see me again," she said wistfully, shyly. "When you are over on this side of the bay, or any time, I'd be so glad of it. I've been living very quietly — too quietly."

"I will!" Tony promised, touched. But as she got herself into the becoming stripes and colors, she wondered if she would. Life was wonderful without the Bellamys!

CHAPTER IX

TWO weeks later the Bellamys came over to the city for a few weeks to stay at the Fairmont hotel, and Tony was almost immediately asked by her new friend to come up and have tea with her. She had a thoroughly pleasant hour with the mother and daughter, enjoying the luxury of the big corner suite, and the hot tea, and the sense that she was liked and admired. After that she went in two or three times a week.

Once Brenda went with her, and Ruth and Mrs. Patterson liked Brenda, too; they both made it a point to go into Younger's and buy books from Tony's charming sister. And at Christmas time Tony had beautiful presents.

The Bellamys, remembering happier Christmas than a noisy little boy had made complete, went to Havana. But they left their gifts behind them; there were flowers for Aunt Mosey, there was a lovely scarf for Brenda, and for Tony herself there were frail delicate underthings from Ruth, a book from Larry, and a handsome coat from "her attached old friend Harriet Patterson."

"She went up to thank them as soon as they came back, and found Ruth alone. It was a dark, foggy January afternoon, and Tony was glad to get warm and to give all her Christmas news over her teacup, and get all of Ruth's in return. Ruth looked better than Tony had ever seen her; she had a good color, and seemed in fine spirits, and she quite simply laid some of the improvements to Tony herself.

"You've been extremely good for me, my dear. Both Mother and Larry see it. A daughter couldn't have been sweeter."

"I've done nothing, you make me ashamed!" Tony protested.

"I'm fond of you, I don't get fond of many persons," Ruth said with her pathetic smile.

Lawrence Bellamy was not always at the hotel for the tea parties that his wife so much enjoyed, but he came in once or twice, and was always glad to find Tony there. Sometimes they discussed the personnel of the Call office; he knew all the important men there, and was inexhaustibly interested in what went on.

"Boo, that horrible Fitch! He came to dinner one night. I hate him!" Ruth said. "Do you know him, Tony?"

"Oh, yes?" She smiled dreamily.

"And Bessie Cutler, too," she said. "I suppose every one in the office is on to that," Ruth observed.

"She did a column called 'Bessie Saw It' for a while. Now they say she's going to do some work for the Sunday issue."

"Can she do anything?"

"Not really. She's been tried out almost everywhere." Tony had a moment of pity for Bessie. Not much fun ahead of her. Every one said that Frank Fitch was cooling. She could sell her diamonds, maybe."

"The Fitches came to our house for dinner one night," Ruth said. "And she's a sweet little thing."

When Larry went to dress for some business dinner, Ruth said thoughtfully:

"One wonders that Larry doesn't see some attractive woman; they all like him! And after all, I'm twelve years older than he is."

Benefits From Forests

The benefits from forests are many. The most important are: Protection from soil erosion; retention of rainfall by the spongy layer of leaf mold on the forest floor; lessening of the occurrence of floods; purification of the air by the inhalation of carbon dioxide and exhalation of oxygen by the leaves of the trees; improvement of fish and hunting; the profitable use of lands which are of no value except for forests.
